Slowing of U.S. Economy Raises Policy Questions for Reagan

For months, the Reagan administration has planned to appeal to the other major industrial democracies, especially Japan, to open government's management of the their markets to U.S. goods and to join in a new round of talks on worldwide trade liberalization.

With the recent Senate's vote calling Japan an unfair trader and the Commerce Department's new evidence of the economic effect of imports, the Reagan administration has hoped to strengthen its hand at Bonn by citing the possibility that Congress might pass protectionist legislation.

In addition, Secretary of State George P. Shultz and the chairman down to the tide of imported goods of the Federal Reserve Board, Paul A. Volcker, have been appealing to Europe's stronger nations to stimulate their economies, with tax remeasure of how much strength im-ductions or other devices. Amal to Police South Lebanon

By Thomas L. Friedman

Ven York Times Service
JERUSALEM — Israel would be prepared to "trade" the security zone it plans to establish in southem Lebanon for an informal agreement with Lebanon's Shiite militia, Amal, to keep the area quiet, senior Israeli military sources said Friday.

"We would be prepared to trade the security zone for a deal with the Shiites, said a very senior military source directly involved in policymaking on Lebanon. "We would like them to know that we mean business. Though we know that Amal could not, even if it wanted, fully guarantee security in the area. we believe they could do so to a large degree. We regard them as an address we can deal with and we are not looking for any formal ar-

The official's remarks, Israeli military analysts say, reflect a change taking place within Israeli military thinking in recent months. There is now an ever-increasing understanding that it is impossible to go back to the pre-invasion situation in southern Lebanon, when Israel relied for security exclusively on a friendly force led by the late Major Saad Haddad, a Greek Catholic who died last year, and that new centers of power have been created as a by-product of that invasion.

Concurrently, there is the realization that Israel now will have to deal with these forces on a new

While Major Haddad was a Christian, his militia was generally estimated to comprise two thirds Shiite and one third Christian volunteers before Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

Israel has gone essentially from viewing southern Lebanon as an area that must be dominated by the pro-Israeli Christian minority to seeing it as an area that can be stable and secure only if the majority Shiite population has a major

Fine. Now we are almost gone. There should be no more obstacles. We are not interested in the United Nations or the Lebanese Army being there."

The Israeli proposal is being communicated to the Amal officials in Beirut through all available means, Israeli military sources said. They added, however, that thus far they have not gotten any positive response. It would appear that the Amal officials in general know that the Israelis are leaving anyway and hence see no reason to get involved now in making commitments to

At the same time, the position of Mr. Berri has been weakening and any cooperation with Israel on his part would only be exploited to undermine him further.

The overture to the Shiites comes as the Israeli cabinet is about to discuss the final phase of Israel's withdrawal from Lebanon.

At its meeting Sunday the cabinet is expected to approve the last two phases of the withdrawal. The first of these is to take place in the next week or 10 days and involve a pullback from the western and eastern fronts to a line running from about three to seven miles (five to 11 kilometers) north of the

This is roughly the size of the "security zone" Israel plans to establish immediately north of the frontier. It is this zone Israeli officials speak of trading.

The final phase is to involve a pullback of troops from this security strip to the international border. Military sources said that Defense Minister Yitzhak Rahin would like this completed by June 6.

The Israeli-backed, predominantly Christian South Lebanon Army, led by General Antoine Lahd, will not be able to move And when the Israelis refer to the freely throughout the security zone, Shiites today they are not referring according to Israeli military to the traditional families with sources. India Stops Talks On Bhopal Payment

By Sanjoy Hazarika New York Times Service NEW DELHI — India has

stopped negotiations for an out-ofcourt settlement with Union Carbide Corp., saying that the U.S. company had offered an unacceptable figure of $200 million as compensation for the gas leak disaster at Bhopal, an Indian official said Friday

The official, who declined to be identified, said that the proposed payments were to be spread over 30 years and that the $200-million figure was to include interest accrued in the period. The government re-jected the offer earlier this month, but never made the compensation proposal public.

About 2,000 people died in De-cember when clouds of methyl isocyanate escaped from a faulty storage tank at a Union Carbide-owned pesticide plant in Bhopal in central India. The government says at least 300,000 persons were injured, and it is suing Union Carbide in a New York court for damages. "My perception is that they seemed to have some interest in a settlement but somehow they have never addressed the dimensions of the tragedy," said the official, who has been involved in talks with Union Carbide representatives.

The Union Carbide proposal linked the amount of compensation to the number of dead and injured, the loss of animals and the damage to Bhopal's environment and personal property, he said.

Indian officials and the American businessmen discussed the issue at two meetings spread over four days earlier this month but failed to agree. One suggestion by Union Carbide that the government had re-jected involved the conversion of part of the plant into an orphanage. But that, the source said, meant changing Indian property laws. Union Carbide had also offered to reimburse government expenses for its handling of the disaster, cov-ering medical relief, feeding the displaced and other steps. But again this was largely to be done within the framework of the $200million limit, the official said. Union Carbide agreed Thursday to provide $5 million in emergency aid to Bhopal survivors without waiting for the courts to determine whether the company was legally

The Indian government, citing the "enormity" of the disaster, said earlier this month that it was not vet able to specify a dollar amount on the damages. A number of American lawyers, however, have filed separate suits seeking a total of $15 billion in damages for Bhopal victims.

U.S. Recovers From Disaster in Vietnam

It Is as Strong as Ever in Pacific, Analysts Say, While Communism Wanes

By Leslie H. Gelb

New York Times Service WASHINGTON - Ten years after the defeat of South Victnam, there is widespread agreement among policy analysts that the posi-tion of the United States in Asia is stronger now than at any time since the end of World War IL

In April 1975, it was in shambles. A decade ago, North Vietnam reveled in victory. Now the economy of the united Vietnam is stagnating and Hanoi is mired in its own "Vietnam" in Cambodia.

In the span of 10 years, policy analysts say, Vietnam, the Soviet Union and most Communist movements in Asia tumbled from victory or ascendancy to decline, while the United States moved from defeat to a position of strength. The turnaround was due largely to a change in the politics of U.S. policy-making toward

For 40 years, no foreign policy issue was more divisive than Asia, from what to do about China right after World War II through the Korean War to Vietnam. But in the last 10 years, after the rapprochement with China and the end of the Vietnam War, few policy issues have garnered more bipartisan support. Yet the question of who lost Vietnam is still hotly disputed by the people who once struggled over policy and fought the war. Among the issues raised are these:

 Why did the defeat not lead Asian countries other than Cambodia and Laos to fall under Communist control like "a row of dominoes," as President Eisenhower and his successors predicted? Did America's stand in Vietnam delay or make possible America's current position of strength in Asia?

 Why have Hanoi and Moscow been unable to capitalize on their victory? What parallels are to be drawn for Central America?

The questions-and answers about the Vietnam experience slice deeply into virtually every central foreign policy issue in the Reagan administration, from Central America to Grenada, Lebanon and terrorism.

Mr. Zamyatin's comments appeared to harden indications that Moscow might refuse to accept any agreement on cutting back intercontinental and medium-range arms unless the U.S. agreed to negotiate a ban on the development of space weapons.

Mr. Zimyanin, who holds the powerful post of secretary in the Communist Party Central Committee, told Bonn that taking part in the space weapons research program would inevitably affect relations between the Soviet Union and West Germany. We heard with astonishment

Mr. Zimyanin said that Mr. Kohl's argument that participation was vital in order to gain access to new technology was "absurd." ■ Tass on Détente

Tass press agency said Friday that Washington's rejections of Soviet calls for moratoriums on the testing, development and deployment of nuclear weapons were frustrating a return to détente, United Press International reported from

Vice Admiral Wong Hsi-ling, the former intelligence chief, was convicted by a military court as a principal in killing the writer, Henry Liu, who wrote a critical biography of Taiwan's president, Chiang Ching-kuo. The verdict came little more than a week after two leaders of Taiwan's criminal gang, the Bamboo Union, were convicted and sentenced to life in prison in a Taipei district court for planning and carrying out the murder of Mr. Liu. The court said Admiral Wong had arranged the slaying with the gang leaders.

was dead for 1985, the House Republican whip, Trent Lott of Mis-sissippi, said: "I think so." James A. McClure, the Idaho of areas where they were once only Republican who is handling the issue in the Senate, said: "It's pretty clear that military aid is dead for an extended period of time."

But the Republicans indicated that the administration would renew its fight for military aid when Congress allocates foreign assistance for the 1986 fiscal year, which begins Oct. 1. "This is not the last vote on this issue," Mr. Lott said. Last year, the administration respect that this proves the war was uested $14 million in military funds for the rebels, to be funneled through the Central Intelligence Agency. Congress allocated the money but stipulated that it could not be released until the new session of Congress voted to do so.

With congressional opposition to his request growing, Mr. Reagan proposed a new approach last month, that the aid would be used only for humanitarian purposes if Nicaragua's ruling Sandinists agreed to begin negotiations with the rebels and those talks produced results within 60 days. If not, the money would be converted automatically into military assistance. This offer won few converts and Republican leaders have been telling the White House for weeks that the president's request faced virtu-ally certain defeat. Lawmakers who have talked recently with Mr. Reagan say he has "a real emotional commitment" to the rebel cause, as Representative John S. McCain, an Arizona Republican, pur it.

■ Europeans Lobby for Aid

Winston Churchill 2d, a member of Parliament and the grandson of the British prime minister during World War II, visited the White House on Thursday as part of a delegation of West Europeans urg-ing Congress to release aid to Nicaraguan rebels. The Washington Post reported.

The visit by Mr. Churchill and a dozen other persons was part of a White House effort to gain the backing on the aid issue. The group presented a petition to Congress declaring that aid to the rebels is indispensable."

After a White House session at which Mr. Reagan made a brief appearance, Mr. Churchill said the United States should attempt to halt the spread of communism Central America now, "when the stakes are relatively low."

If this effort fails, he said, "we may wake up 5 or 10 years from now to find that the allies of the Soviet Union are on the Rio Grande and you do, indeed, have to commit U.S. forces and that this could be a Vietnam-type involvement, which we are so desperately

Procter & Gamble Bedeviled Anew

Procter & Gamble, the U.S. conglomerate that sells $13 bilison worth of Ivory Soap and other household products a year, says it is being besieged again by rumors that it is in league with the devil. These rumors, it says, stems from its 100-year-old trademark: a man in the moon, a popular decorative theme in the 1880s, that is surrounded by 13 stars representing the 13 original U.S. states.

The rumors first peaked in 1982, when the company was getting 15,000 phone calls a month about the rumors, most of which arose from chain letters circulated in fundamentalist Protestant sections of the South and Southwest. Now the rumors have mushroomed again, to 6,000 calls a month, mostly comit g from Roman Catholic neighborhoods in the Northeast. Procter & Gamble has publicly denounced "false and malicious rumors associating the company with Satanism." The company says it cannot estimate the effect on sales, but it has hired two detective agencies. Pinkerton Inc. and Wackenbut Corp., to track down the chain-letter writers: " The evictor energy

U.S. Spy Says TRW Had Lax Security

By Kathy Sawyer
Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — A convicted spy, Christopher J. Boyce, has testified before a Senate hearing that employees at the California headquarters of TRW Systems Group treated security as a joke.

He told a Senate hearing Thursday that employees who worked in TRW's "black vault" filled with sensitive government information used a "classified" satchel to smuggle in peppermint schnapps and that they used a machine for destroying code cards to make banana daiquiris, which they drank on duty.

In this atmosphere during night and weekend hours starting in 1975, Mr. Boyce said, he was able, at age 21, to remove or photograph secret documents concerning the operation of highly secret U.S. intelligence satellites. He was convicted of selling the information to Soviet agents.

Mr. Boyce, whose espionage was depicted in the book and movie The Falcon and the Snowman," said he is helping the government because, after a lifetime of trying to tear things down, he wants to perform "a constructive act."

Convicted in 1977 on eight counts of espionage, he is serving a 40-year sentence in an isolation cell in a federal prison in Marion, Illinois. His espionage partner, Andrew Daulton Lee, is serving a life

The hearing was the last in a fivemonth investigation by the permanent subcommittee on investigations of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. The inquiry indicated that the system for protecting defense secrets is collapsing because of bureaucratic inlighting, a swelling workload and lack of government leadership. Officials of TRW, one of the Central Intelligence Agency's principal suppliers of reconnaissance satellites, maintained Thursday that security procedures were "sound" in the period since 1975 and called Mr. Boyce's charges "exaggerated." But they acknowledged that a government investigation had found "limited use of alcohol on the premises" and "poor security supervision."

"That makes me wonder how serious you've been about correcting these things," Senator Sam Nunn, a Democrat of Georgia, said. Mr. Boyce testified that a fellow employee used a photo of a monkey on his security badge and gained access to secret information. Paul W. Schwegler, a TRW executive, said: "I've seen that badge. I find it extremely difficult to believe that badge was used." He said that accountability for badges and other security measures have been

No matter how security is improved, Mr. Boyce said, it will not work without debunking myths glorifying espionage as exciting, sexy and lucrative. Mr. Boyce blamed the entertainment industry and government security briefers for portraying treason in a way that is "just what all those bored, young secretaries" with secret clearances are "dying to hear."

The truth about the spy business is "sweaty palms and shaky hands ... and gut-gripping fear," he said.

WASHINGTON — Despite his reputation as a dazzling performer and persuader, Ronald Reagan has made a series of often inexplicable misstatements over the years that have angered many constituencies, mired him in political trouble and dismayed even his close associates and admirers.

Behind the Slipping GNP

The sharp slowdown of the U.S. economy in this year's first quarter further erodes the credibility of the Reagan administration's predictions and policies for 1985. The remaining quarters will probably be stronger, but the risks of tight money are now enhanced and the need to reduce the federal deficit has become even more urgent.

The Commerce Department estimates the gross national product's real growth in the winter months, after allowing for inflation, was at the annual rate of 1.3 percent. That is the slowest quarterly growth since the current recovery began. The rate was three times as large in the last quarter of 1984. There is no need yet to prepare for another recession. Such slowdowns do not necessarily snowball, but unemployment still exceeds 7 percent. Most forecasters still expect economic growth through 1985, but not at the 4 percent rate the administration predicted in preparing policy recommendations two months ago.

Slower growth is typical when an expansion brought the budget deficits down. has run beyond two years. The sluggish pace of — THE NEW YORK federal tax refunds caused by computer trou-bles added damage. But the huge trade deficit is the more profound, enduring problem.

The high value of the dollar has sucked in imports and severely hobbled American exports. And administration policies are clearly to blame for some of this damage. The dollar's strength has been sustained by the government's huge borrowings at high interest rates to finance the chronically high budget deficits.

Until recently, the administration rejected that connection. Now, evidently chastened by rising demands for protectionist curbs against imports, Washington officials have begun to point to the slowdown in growth as one more reason for action on the deficit.

There is no quick fix, because budget and export-import trends evolve only slowly. The Federal Reserve therefore has the immediate burden of guarding against excessively tight money. But its task would be more comfortable if the administration and Congress

America's Harvest of Shame

Twenty-five years ago, Edward R. Murrow's documentary, "Harvest of Shame," aroused the American public's conscience by revealing the ghastly conditions in which migrant field workers toiled to bring a fresh, varied diet to the tables of the United States. Since then, when migrant workers are found held in bondage or a migrant child dies from dysentery, public concern again flares. Congress may even tighten slightly the poorly enforced standards meant to curb abuses. But the ephemeral quality of this concern was highlighted by last week's decision by the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to kill a longawaited rule requiring that fresh water and toilets be provided to field workers.

There is a sick-joke quality about the Labor Department's justification of its decision. OSHA's director, Robert Rowland, says that even if a federal standard had been set, it would have been laxly enforced. Well, he is certainly in a position to know how often his agency disregards its own rules. Mr. Rowland notes, moreover, that migrants in 13 states are already covered by some sort of sanitation standards. Perhaps he thinks those in other states can move across state lines when they feel the urge. After all, they are migrants.

We are not talking about unnecessary frills. Thousands of field workers and their children are forced to toil for long hours in the hot sun with, at best, a bucket of contaminated water from which to drink and no access to toilet facilities. Numerous studies, including studies by Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore of workers on the nearby Delmarva Peninsula, have shown that, as a result of these primitive conditions, workers suffer high rates of infectious, parasitic and toxic diseases. One expert, recently hired by OSHA to review the evidence, concluded that parasitic disease is more common among U.S. field workers than among Guatemalan children. And because the U.S. workers have nowhere to wash their hands and must relieve themselves in the fields, these diseases are passed on to nearby communities, and to consumers.

The compelling need, on both humanitarian and health grounds, is no longer seriously disputed. Even the farm organizations, which have traditionally opposed federal standards, have muted their opposition. One official told the Post last week that "many of our members are prepared to put this behind us." Advocates for the farm workers are prepared to appeal OSHA's decision in court. Labor Secretarydesignate William Brock should ensure that appeal is not necessary. Mr. Rowland says his agency has "higher priority standards" to enforce. What priority can be higher than treating all people in America as human beings?

Clouds Over a Deficit-Ridden America

WASHINGTON — As I was preparing to leave Washington for a trip to Spain, there was a strange ambivalence about the capital and the country I was temporarily abandoning.

Washington was as beautiful as ever in the spring and the nation seemed as prosperous and comfortable as I could remember it in all the years I have been traveling and reporting on its politics. But just beneath that placid surface there were apprehensions so deep that the mood seemed almost schizophrenic. Consciously and, I think, not foolishly, the question in my mind as I packed was whether the euphoric spell would be shattered by the time I got back.

I hope not. But three conversations, among many, will tell you why there were some dark clouds on the horizon of my imagination. The first was with Representative

James J. Florio of New Jersey, an able and conscientious Democratic legislator who had just decided not to run for the governorship of his state. Part of it, surely, was his recognition of the strength of the incumbent governor, Thomas H. Kean, but part of it was his sense that things are headed for a crisis that could make a race hazardous.

There is so much anger in the meetings I've been to between local officials and citizens," Mr. Florio said, "that it's painful to watch. With the cutbacks in federal aid the local officials have to raise taxes or fees - and the people say they can't take any more. I find myself trying to keep people I like from hitting each other.

By David S. Broder

"It's the same way up here" in Congress, he added. "Reagan keeps pushing for more defense spending and blaming Congress for the deficit. And my colleagues are so frustrated they lash out at each other.

It's really gotten mean." The second conversation was with Richard A. Snelling, the esti-mable former governor of Vermont. He is working full-time, through an organization he created called Proposition One, lobbying without pay for major deficit cuts. To Mr. Snelling, that means spending cuts in both military and domestic programs and an increase in taxes.

Mr. Snelling, who had a successful business career and four terms as governor before retiring last year, said: "I'm an incurable optimist, but for the first time in my life, I'm scared. This deficit could do my country in."

Although an ardent Republican, he often challenged Mr. Reagan's fiscal policies when he was chairman of the National Governors Association, and he is even more outspoken now.

"Ronald Reagan is a totally honperson," Mr. Snelling said, "and he believes we can grow our way out of this deficit. But last year the economy grew over 6 percent — and the deficit increased. Reagan says he's cut taxes, but he's really just put the country on a tax holi-day. We just haven't been sent the bill. I think we have six months. maybe a year, to start getting this under control, or it can destroy us."

My third talk was with Lee la-cocca, the Chrysler chairman whose autobiography has made him more of a folk hero than any other American businessman. He is a nominal Republican who is caustically criti-cal of the leadership of both parties. Mr. lacocca talked as much about the trade deficit as he did the budget deficit. In blunt terms, he said he thinks the present national leadership lacks the guts to deal with either of them. Because of that belief, he has put his company on "idle speed" for the next three years, postponing plans for expansion of its domestic production facilities. He sees upheaval ahead.

"Unless we decide somehow to sit down and stop this flow of blood, there will be a radical change" in national leadership in 1988, he said. "The IOUs are out of control. They're just piling up for our kids."

These were three separate con-versations with three very different individuals who have major disagreements on most political issues. What was striking was the shared sense of deep apprehension — the belief that the bubble has to burst, and that the only question is when.

They all see the current economic prosperity and political euphoria as being a thin veneer covering the cracks in the foundations of American society. They all believe that delay in dealing with the deficits is putting the financial and political systems under a strain that could easily crack the country wide open. I hope they are wrong, But I can't convince myself they are.

Gorbachev: Hardball With a Softer Touch?

By Dimitri K. Simes

yet turn out to be one — to improve the conduct of Soviet foreign policy. For some 10 years, the Politburo could be relied upon to set in a large transfer and the hard way that the heightened tension does not necessarily work to their advantage.

Beyond this, Moscow is a large transfer and the hard way that the heightened tension does not necessarily work to their advantage. sy and inept way that made most American administrations look good by default. From now on, this is unlikely to be true. There is, however, nothing to indicate that any superficial warming of relations will in the end lead to a genuine thaw. True, there was nothing particularly impressive in either the substance or the delivery of Mr. Gorbachev's recent arms control initiative. The new Soviet leader coupled an acceptance (in principle) of a summit meeting with an appeal to freeze nuclear and space weapons, including an in-herently unverifiable ban on research. He also declared a unilateral moratorium on the deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles in Europe. The snag is that Moscow has, for all practical purposes, completed its planned deployment of new missiles in Europe, and the moratorium will only last six months, unless the United States agrees to follow suit.

Mr. Gorbachev was certainly aware that this old trick, designed to conserve a considerable Soviet superiority, was tried by Leonid I. Brezhnev in 1982 and squarely rejected by the West. He could be under no illusions that the Western response would now be more enthusiastic, as it this has been widely acclaimed as a masterly performance. Mr. Gorba-chev scored a cheap point, and Wash-ington got the signal that the Soviet Union may finally have a man in charge who knows how to play international hardball with a soft touch. Mr. Gorbachev does, fortunately, seem intent on continuing Konstantin U. Chernenko's efforts to resume the superpower dialogue. His first concerns will be to consolidate his power and to get the totalitarian wel-fare state working again. The latter effort is bound to face serious opposition both from the elite, fearful of losing privileges, and from the peo-ple, who are reluctant to accept the hardships associated with reform. It would thus be illogical if he did not seek at least a stabilization of relations with the United States.

But Mr. Gorbachev has other reasons to seek a better relationship. The Russians are still smarting from the events of 1983, when the deployment of American missiles in Europe etery is the wrong place to visit.

least as important as what he visits.

4. What the president says is at WASHINGTON — Mikhail S. pushed them to withdraw from arms control negotiations in Geneva, and they have learned the hard way that they have learned the hard way that the conduct of Societ forcing policy.

Beyond this. Moscow is genuinely interested in using diplomacy to derail American military programs, particularly Ronald Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative.

Finally, the Soviet Union is as eve in need of trade with the West - and it hopes that greater economic coop-eration with the United States would discourage Americans from pressing their allies to deny the Soviet Union high technology and easy credits.

It is no wonder that Mr. Gorbachev has been nice to American Congressmen visiting Moscow or that he responded favorably to President Reagan's invitation for a meeting. But Americans should have no illusions: The basic differences between the superpowers remain. There is no sign that a stabilization of relations will develop into a genuine accommodation between the two giants.

The new Soviet leader's energies and talents will, to a large degree, be directed toward goals inimical to American interests. What is more, if he succeeds in making his nation's economy more efficient, the Soviet military machine will benefit.

In arms control, Mr. Gorbachev seems to be pursuing a double-track diplomacy: Negotiate with the Reagan administration while trying to prevail in a battle for Western public indeed was not.

Still, the outside world has learned to expect so little of Soviet leaders the Great Communicator on his own that even a rather trivial move such as ground, but, in a nuclear-anxious Western Europe, not much skill is required to generate discontent. In the Third World, the Russians feel overextended. But their reluctance to make new costly commitments does not amount to packing their bags and abandoning places where they have already invested resources and prestige. Moscow's attitude might best be called "assertive retrenchment": from Nicaragua to Angola, from Syria to Afghanistan, the Kremin shows no willingness to seek a graceful exit. On the contrary, as Mr. Gorbachev warned Pakistan, Soviet patience with hostile guerrilla movements and their foreign supporters is wearing increasingly thin.

Is there any hope of a more farreaching change in Soviet foreign po-licy? Possibly. The Politburo itself seems to realize that its international strategy is based on obsolete and flawed assumptions, including the belief that the global correlation of forces is constantly shifting in the Soviet Union's favor. If the Kremlin draws the right conclusions and accepts the need to scale down its messianic aspirations, everyone, includ-ing the Russians, would benefit.

The American policy toward the Soviet Union should be open-minded and nonprovocative. It is important - particularly at this stage when Mr. Gorbachev is still developing his foreign policy -- for the Reagan administration to communicate an interest in a more regulated relationship. At the very least, the two countries should seek to pursue their overlapping interests — in environmental issues and nuclear nonproliferation, for example - in a more sustained and reliable way. Little can be gained and a lot can be lost from giving Mr. Gorbachev the impression that nothing short of surrendering the fundamental interests of his regime would allow rap-prochement with the United States. "get acquainted" summit meeting coupled with an extension of the second Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty and an agreement to expand nonstrategic trade would be a much better way to reach out to him.

Yet Americans should not forget that the Politburo's tentative signs of moderation are, to a large degree, a product of Washington's efforts to discipline the Soviet Union. It was not American concessions but Western steadfastness - in developing the "star wars" program and deploying missiles in Europe — that brought the Russians back to the table in Geneva. America also has a part to play in the Third World, where rebels confronting the Soviet Union and its clients clearly add to the Kremlin's sense of overextension. Washington should continue and, when appropriate, expand its support of such forces.

Maintaining pressure on the Soviet Union is not an obstacle to a more constructive and stable relationship. On the contrary, it may be a condition for a thaw. President Reagan will need both a firm hand and a fine touch in dealing with the Kremlin's new man. The writer, a senior associate at the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, contributed this comment to The New York Times.

In a recent case, the nine justices of the Supreme Court agreed that Congress gave the Central Intelligence Agency broad powers to conceal information obtained from intelligence sources, Justices Brennan and Marshall. in a concurring opinion, would have defined "intelligence sources" more narrowly, but even they agreed with the result in the case at issue.

It is reasonable that the CIA be given special exemptions from the Freedom of Information Act, and in principle the court's decision is understandable. But this is more than a case of dry statutory interpretation. It involves real human beings who were severely injured. In the 1950s, the CIA embarked on a program called MKULTRA to experiment with mind control in order to catch up with what was assumed to be dramatic Soviet and Chinese advances in this field. Eighty institutions and 185 private researchers had contracts with the CIA to perform this work. Many individuals became, without their consent, the subjects of psychiatric and drug experiments.

It is not known who most of these people are or what became of them. The plaintiffs in the case the Supreme Court decided tried to force the CIA to turn over records of the experiments so the victims could be traced and informed. They were unsuccessful.

From the few known cases, the results of the experiments were horrible. Some subjects, given LSD, suffered permanent mental impairment. Some committed suicide over drug-induced fears and depressions. Some research was carried out in Canada, where a private psychiatrist experimented on patients at the Royal Victoria Hospital in Montreal. A group of surviving victims, one the wife of a member of the Canadian Parliament, has sued the U.S. government for compensation; the CIA persists in denying liability, and the case has dragged on in court for more than four years. In another case, involving an American whose family discovered the CIA's role in his suicide vears afterward, compensation was awarded. But most of those who were the subjects of MKULTRA experiments still do not know it. These victims of government action must be found and cared for. The courts will not order the CIA to reveal the required information, but the agency, acting on its own, can trace many victims through its contractors. If this is not done, Congress, which ultimately makes the rules governing CIA activity, can order a search and provide compensation for the Canadians as well as the Americans involved. It is the only just and honorable thing to do.

[President Reagan] deserves some sympa-thy. Two currents of feeling are generated by the war anniversary that are to some extent at odds. Both are generous in impulse. The one finds cause for celebration in the liberation of Europe and the transformation of the German polity. The other insists that the crimes of Nazi-dominated Germany shall never be forgotten. The difference is sharp. It is no wonder if the president has failed to hit upon a symbolism that does justice to both.

ior in playing in a piece of a scandalous nature at the Theatre Moderne here, a Parisian actress has been jailed and all the other actors and actresses, as well as the authors of the play and the manager of the theatre, are to be prosecut-ed. A spectator rose [on April 18] in the middle of the performance and ordered the play stopped. The audience thought that the spectator was a private individual, but a minute later a number of policemen entered the theatre and climbed onto the stage. The actors and actresses, the latter being mostly in attire which at the best can be described as scanty, were arrested and removed to the police station, the police being obliged to make their way with their prisoners through a hoscile crowd.

1935: N.Y. Senate Acts to Ban Nudity ALBANY - Without a word in opposition, the State Senate passed the McCall anti-nudism bill, which originated with the Legion of Decency and has been quietly pushed by them behind the scenes at the Capitol. It will meet more strenuous opposition in the Assembly. Senator John T. McCall of New York, its sponsor, called the bill up with remarks in which he said that Communists were wearing shorts in Dutchess County; that shorts were disgusting enough, but there were other things worse that had to be stopped. Senator William T. Byrne, most voluble orator in this House, took the floor for the bill. "This particular bill has the approval of all clean-thinking, homeloving, moral people in our country," said Senator Byrne, after talking about a half-hour.

Reagan Can Learn From His Blunders on Germany By William Safire

XX/ASHINGTON — If you were VV planning a series of events to commemorate the Holocaust, and you were seeking some way, after 40 years, to revivify the nightmare of Nazi terror, what series of unlikely events would you hope for?

First you would have a team of White House advance men let it be known that the president of the United States would decline to visit a site visit to West Germany. Then you would have the president botch his answer at a news conference, giving as his reason a desire not to "impose" a sense of guilt on Ger-mans for the murder of six million.

To top it off, to reach far beyond surviving Jews into the homes of tens of millions of American and German veterans, you would get the president to announce his incredible intention of laying a wreath at a cemetery that includes the graves of Nazi Waffen SS officers who may have been among those responsible for the murder of U.S. prisoners during the Battle of the Bulge.

In the ensuing outrage, our West German allies would be reminded that any attempt to lorget the unforgivable will always be mightily resisted; Jews all over the world, including the forgetful, would be forced to look again into the abyss: and the generation of Americans who fought the last uncontroversial war would rise to instruct its present leaders that statesponsored evil is never a bygone. Hard though it may be to believe, all the attention-getting blunders took place and the public's fierce re-action has been all that moralists and patriots could have hoped for. White House advance men will remember the "Deaver debacle" for years, and no agent will soon repeat this farrago of unseemly acts and this to be said for all that has gone wrong: It has produced worthwhile results in several areas. 1. The post-landslide hubris of the insensitive judgments, but there is Reagan image-makers has been re-duced. The president's men are not public-relations geniuses and Mr. Reagan, as communicator, has shown himself to be capable of misjudging opinion and bobbling symbols. 2. This president has demonstrated a willingness to admit error publicly, rather than to "hang tough" to the bitter end. After his ill-briefed news conference, he went out of his way to tell interviewers: "I will say any time that anyone wants me to say it, as publicly as I can, that no, we must never forget." This week, he actually used the words "my mistaken impression" in connection with his earlier decision to forgo a visit to a death camp. Those forthright corrections are signs of strength and good sense.

3. He is now likely to strike the right balance in what he finally does. The balance is not to say "what's past is past" to Germans and "we must never forget" to Jews, which is contradictory, but to celebrate "40 years of peace" without ever forgetting what the war was about, which is not in the least contradictory.

This means a visit to a concentration camp buttressed, not balanced, by a memorial to a German such as Konrad Adenauer. The Bitburg cem-

Here is the opportunity to cement the alliance of former enemies with an understanding of its meaning, and a chance to assure the survivors of the Holocaust and all those who suffered in World War II that remembrance still resonates. Banalities will not suffice; if the president is to recoup, for himself and for all Americans, his message must be thought through, its subtleties expressed memorably. Now is the moment, after the blunders and backings-off, for the legions of the offended to stop ripping into the president and to start rooting for him as America's representative to history. Thinking shallowly at first, and then sloppily served, Mr. Reagan compounded his error and earned the angry reaction; now, made aware of the unexploded minefields of memory, he faces the challenge of responding with sensitivity, grace and clarity.

Will he rise to the occasion? His evident concern and eagerness to correct his mistakes give us reason to hope so. The necessary remembrance of evil by Germans and Americans does not conflict with the purposes of their alliance; on the contrary, the point is waiting to be made that re-minders of the hell of the past binds us to protect freedom in the future. The president's stumble will have been a blessing if he is given a chance to straighten up and finish strong. The New York Times.

Albania: The Mouse That Roared May Roar Again

BOSTON — Albania is not ordinarily the subject of grave concern in the foreign offices of the West. This, today, may be a mistake. Albania is an interesting country, and now that Enver Hoxha is dead, the last of his kind, Albania becomes much more interesting. It might even become dangerous.

Albania has lived for 40 years in aggressive isolation, a result of Mr. Hoxha's rule but also of a peculiar history that has inclined Albanians to look upon outsiders with suspicion and find safety with family or clan. Its geographical isolation, and the combativeness of its people, are why British and American intelligence services launched an operation in 1949 to pry the country from the Soviet bloc, to which it belonged. Making use of the same people and techniques that had been used to support Albanian guerrilla resistance to Axis occupation, several hundred men were infiltrated into the country over a period of four years to organize resistance to the Hoxha government. Half, at least, were killed or arrested. The operation failed because it was betrayed by Kim Philby, the British double agent who initially commanded the British side of the affair, and because it was badly carried out -.. but also simply because things that work in wartime don't always work in peacetime. Resistance can be organized against an occupying army. This is not so easy when army and police are natives of the country, and when the national tradition is xenophobic and absolutist.

The Illyria of classical times, Albania was under nominal Byzantine rule until the 14th century, becoming an Ottoman conquest in the tained after the First World War, when the great powers set out to divide the country among its neighbors (it is only 120 miles long and 40 miles vide). Woodrow Wilson's commitment to national self-determination stopped that. Ahmed Zogu, who had served in both Ottoman and Austrian armies, struggled to power in the 1920s, made himself president in 1925, and became King Zog in 1928. Eleven years later he was out, as Italy seized the country. The Partisan resistance that then developed depended upon the Yugoslav communists, and got its arms mainly from the Western Allies. The Soviet Union had part in Albania's liberation. Mr. Hoxha imposed an absolute rule on the country that owed something to the national tradition, and much to the Stalinism that had prevailed in the Communist International during the years of his own political formation. He committed the country to Stalin, and broke with Yugoslavia when Yugoslavia broke with the Soviet Union in 1948. He broke with Moscow, in turn, when the Russians broke with Stalinism and resumed relations with Yugoslavia. He broke with China in 1978, when China resumed relations with the Soviet Union.

It can safely be said that the key to Albanian policy was always the relationship with Yugosla-via, and the search for an external ally to guarantee Albania against what the Albanians have understood to be the permanent threat of partition and foreign domination. For more than a century. Yugoslavia (earlier Serbia) has concentury. Yugoslavia (earlier Serbia) has con-their own future, and what they decide will have trolled the region of Kosovo, where there now are one million Albanians. one million Albanians - between a third and a half as many as live today in Albania itself. Enver Hoxha's successor, Ramiz Alia, is talked about as a man who will open up the country. politically and culturally. There is no particular evidence for this; but isolation and autarchy will not be easy to maintain. Unlike Mr. Hoxha, educated in France and briefly a diplomat before the war, Mr. Alia scarcely knows the outside world. Since becoming a Partisan in his teens, he has made his career wholly within the Albanian Communist apparatus. He has, however, spoken of the need for economic reform.

The (so-called) Brezhnev doctrine, as announced by the Soviet Union at the time of its invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968, holds that communism is an irreversible political condition. and that this theoretical point will be assured by the Soviet Army — at least, in those communist countries the Soviet Army can get at. In the Albanian case, there is a problem: Yugoslavia lies in the way.

This is why the Albanian situation is interesting. It has amply been shown in Eastern Europe that only the Soviet Army blocks the progress of nationalism, ideological deviation, revisionism, reform — and of democratization.

Albania is poor and backward, but has already amply demonstrated its nationalism. It recently has improved relations with italy (historically, its window to the West), Greece, and, guardedly, Yugoslavia. It will soon have a rail connection to Western Europe by way of Yngosiavia. Its Western trade has slowly been increasing. A few tourists come. Inevitably, new thought will come too. The Albanians have the means to decide

Sotheby Sales of Islamic Work Show Unparalleled Confusion

T ONDON — The art market often defies rational assessment, but in no area does it do so as blatantly as in what is conventionally called Islamic art. A round of sales at Sotheby's from Monday to Wednesday has pointed up the un-

Souren Melikian

characterizes this area. The confusion is, first, one of perception. The phrase "Islamic art," widely used as it may be, is about as meaningful as the phrase "Christian art" would be if it were used to describe anything produced in the Christian world from the early Middle Ages through the late 19th century. It covers the huge production of Iran, with its long, complex history; of the Arab countries, and of Turkey; and of the highly diversified Islamic areas of India. No single specialist could possibly handle it all, and yet that is what the auction houses experts must do. That they should occasionally get it not quite right is only too understandable.

Going through the huge two-day sale of "Fine Oriental Manuscripus and Miniatures" at Sotheby's, one stumbled here and there upon un-tenable attributions. Typically Ira-nian manuscripts of the 15th and 16th century were described as "Ottoman" — i.e., from Turkey — for no plausible reason. A Koran manuscript, with its layout, calligraphy and illumination matched by many other Iranian manuscripts went down as "Qur'an, Arabic manuscript on paper, copied by Abdullah Ibn Rajab Ibn Abdullah al-Khansari, Turkey, dated A.D. 1484." Khansari is a Persian name and, in the absence of any indication to the contrary, there is no reason to believe that the very Persian-looking manuscript was copied anywhere but in Iran. Another Koran of the same school and period was labeled "Central Asia," again for no perceptible reason. There is some irony in the fact that both fared poorly. The first was bought in at £5,500 (about $7,150) and the second was sold for £6,500.

One would at least expect consistency in prices when it comes to pages belonging to the same manu-script with a definite location, a date and a dedication to a wellknown sultan. But this was not the case with successive auction appearances of Turkish miniatures from a work called the "Siyar-i more glamorous; volumes I, II and many as 12 volumes, now lost. VI are preserved in the museum attached to the Topkapi Saray. tures on pages that originally came from the Chester Beatty volume turned up at a Drouot auction in Paris conducted by Bernard Oger and Etienne Dumont. A special catalog that the Drouot expert, Jean Soustiel, had printed, was widely distributed and one of the miniatures skyrocketed to 550,000 francs, not counting the sales charge — a world record for any Turkish miniature. Two others from the manuscript were knocked down at 250,000 francs apiece. A year later, five more pages from the manuscript turned up at Drouot. The auctioneer was Eric Buffetand. The expert was again Jean Soustiel, who, as before, sent out the catalog to collectors and museum curators around the world. The response. was as weak this time as it had been enthusiastic before. Foreign dealers such as Spink of London who had played a prominent role in 1984 did not even bother to come. The miniatures were knocked down at prices ranging from 120,000 to 145,000 francs — prices that, in dollars, were half what the cheapest lots sold for a year earlier. This worned Sotheby's expert Nabil Saidi, who said that he found the Paris miniatures more attractive than the seven that he was about to sell in London.

On Monday at Sotheby's the first of the London miniatures rose to a steep £42,000, three times the price of the most expensive miniature in Paris five weeks earlier. The next pieces went for £25,000, £20,000, £24,000 and £22,000. The last two failed to reach the reserve prices and were bought in at £13,000 and £5,000. They have just been sold privately by Sotheby's at prices close to these.

Such failures are surprising, given the importance of the manuscript to the history of Turkish painting. Only a few more leaves are believed to remain in the hands of the Swiss owner from which the Paris and London miniatures came, so there is no question of a glut of the market, as some dealers relationship to the quality of the pieces, when objets d'art were sold at Sotheby's on Tuesday evening and Wednesday. Here and there the catalog entries reflected the tendency to give Iranian objects a expectations of Arab buyers, who are playing a leading role in the market. A typical eastern Iranian bronze pitcher was called "Egyptian," although the caption stated that it came from Neyshabur, in Iran, where several such pieces have come to light. A small bronze inkwell with figurative scenes inlaid in silver and gold, which was bought in Iran three years ago and is typical of late-13th-century design in that country, was described in a long, rambling entry leaving the reader in doubt as to whether it came from northeastern Syria or western Iran. A similarly worded entry graced an important incense

Whether this confusion actually made a difference to the price of either work is doubtful. The inkwell rose to £36,000, which is not terribly expensive for a piece in a exceptionally good state of preservation, and the incense burner went up to £39,000. A 14th-century cas-ket in silver-inlaid bronze from Iran, probably the finest in the world after a piece in the British Museum, also sold for £39,000. A Turkish silver drinking jug of the early 16th century zoomed to

Herzog's Staging of Busoni's 'Faust' Is Hit

B OLOGNA — The surprise hit of the spring opera season in Italy is Ferruccio Busoni's 60-year-old "Doktor Faust," playing to sold-out, enthusiastic houses in the Teatro Comunale of Bologna. Unfin-ished at the composer's death in 1924, the work was completed by his pupil Philipp Jarnach and presented in Dresden a year later. Since then it has been very much a festival opera, mounted occasionally with grand artists and elaborate staging. As a rule there is critical acclaim and public indifference followed by a

Eccentrics in the Mainstream Produce , New Albums of Contemporary Music

By John Rockwell New York Times Service

TEW YORK - The typical European composer Nonce felt part of a cultural tradition. Sustained by his teachers and peers, he was conscious of his place in a continuum of music, even if he chose sometimes to rebel against that tradition or to redefine it. Yet more and more, it seems, Europe, and Europe-anized Japan, have been producing isolated musical eccentrics, and they often count among the most important composers of the day. Four of these men— Karlheinz Stockhausen, Jannis Xenakis, Toru Takemitsu and Arvo Paert - have new records that attest not just to the interest their music arouses, but to its

This development is unexpected, in part because modern technology and travel were supposed to bind us all more closely together, eradicating individual and regional differences. A chief fear among the non-American parts of the world, in fact, is that their indigenous cultures will be Americanized. Yet the eccentric composer has long been the distinguishing feature of the best new American music.

with the Zeitgeist, with our time's forced focus on the individual at the expense of the community. Or perhaps the eclecticism of modern musical styles - the failure of any one trend to assert itself as the mainstream - means the mainstream is made up of uncountable tributaries.

Stockhausen is perhaps Europe's best-known com-poser-eccentric these days; only Deutsche Grammo-phon's indefatigable willingness to document his every musical utterance saves him from marginality. The latest is his mostly choral "Atmen gibt das

Stockhausen started his career a quarter-century ago as a far more conventional modernist, turning out and ritual may have begun with time spent during the mid-1960s in that command center of U.S. compositional eccentricity, California. Since then, his music style, incorporates film stills, pho- has concentrated on communal rituals, a theatricality tographs, reproduced postage reminiscent of George Crumb and all manner of

This has been allied, however, with a Wagnerian principally hinjardo, the under-world slang of turn-of-the-century quasi-operatic cycle, "Light," the first installment of Buenos Aires. Hence the title, attar-which, "Thursday," was released in 1983 as a four-disk

"Atmen gibt das Leben . . . " (Breathing Gives Life . . .) was completed in 1977 and is described as a "choral opera with orchestra (or tape)"; on this recording the forces are the chorus and symphony orchestra of the North German Radio, Hamburg. As with most of Stockhausen's recent music, real beauty coexists uneasily with profound silliness. Stockhausen has proved, from his earliest works through his occasional later masterpieces (e.g., "Hymen"), that he has a deep compositional gift. But he also has a mile-wide ritualistic mysticism. streak of self-indulgence. In the United States, narcissism is encouraged by isolation. In West Germany, it seems to be fostered by lemming-like institutional and

The prime French candidate for eccentric individuality — Greek-French, actually — is Iannis Xenakis, intense music is heard for violin and piano and for the who has been somewhat eclipsed in farue and governmental support by Pierre Boulez but who still lives in the disk, conjures up images of revolving heavenly Paris composing music that sounds like nobody else's. spheres, or angels at play.

One strange aspect of Xenakis's reputation, propagated in large measure by himself, is that he is perceived as an ultrarationalist, almost a French Milton Babbitt. This comes from his mystifying graphs and charts, wherein he attempts to provide a physical or mathematical or psychoacoustical correlation to the mere notes contained in his music.

In fact, however, Xenakis seems more like Edgard Varese, or even Glenn Branca, than Babbitt - a noholds-barred Romantic whose sonic assaults can be best appreciated as Expressionist passion, not rationalist order. Heard in that sense his music sounds wonderfully invigorating. Certainly it sounds that way on the Arditti String Quarter's new Xenakis collection (English RCA). The music sighs and screams and howls, and its every inflection is admirably captured by the Arditti players, who seem to be an English equivalent, in their commitment to contemporary repertory, to the American Kronos Quartet.

Toru Takemitsu is Japan's best-known composer, which might make him an unlikely eccentric. Yet to judge from recent reports, Japan lacks an extensive eature of the best new American music.

Perhaps the reason for the rise of these individualalways been a world-wanderer, as well as a musical ists, in the United States and abroad, has more to do autodidact who resisted ready absorption into any compositional school.

> Often his music has sounded bland, a sincere but devitalized recycling of harmonies and moods better expressed by the likes of Debussy and even Rachmaninoff. But his "In an Autumn Garden" (Varèse Sarabande) is another matter altogether — about the most evocative Takemitsu score I have ever encountered

He never broke entirely from his Japanese heritage; several of his pieces have made use of ancient Japanese instruments, "In an Autumn Garden" is part of a series of commissions from the National Theater of Japan to prominent composers to write works for the traditional Japanese gagaku orchestra (another recipient of this program was Stockhausen). Takemitsu's serial scores and electronic pieces with earnestly chro-matic seriousness. His turn to eccentricity, consonance more material to make up the nearly hourlong score heard on this compact disk.

> The work does not use the old gagaku modes or confine itself to the traditionally circumscribed ways of playing the old instruments. The effect is fascinatingly half-modern, half-ancient: dreamily atmospheric, redolent of a mysterious national past ver contemporary.

> Finally, we have the least well-known composer of this quartet, the Estonian Arvo Paert, who lives in West Berlin. Paert's reputation is growing, partly because of the notable interpreters who champion his music. "Tabula Rasa" (an ECM compact disk) enlists Gidon Kremer, Keith Jarrett, Dennis Russell Davies, the Twelve Cellists of the Berlin Philharmonic and the Russian avant-garde composer Alfred Schnittke, among others.

> Paert is a minimalist, but that does not mean he sounds motoric and trancelike. His music unfolds with

The most overtly gorgeous piece here is the five-minute "Cantus in Memory of Benjamin Britten," which could became as popular as Pachelbel's Canon if anyone promoted it with the requisite crassness. "Fratres" exists in several versions; here this quietly intense music is heard for violin and piano and for the

NYSE Prices Gain Slightly

NEW YORK - Stocks turned in a mixed showing Friday on the New York Stock Ex-change as traders cautiously evaluated the economic outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks rose 1.43 to 1.266.56, finishing the week with a net gain of 0.88. Advances and declines were about even, with volume totaling 81.11 million shares, against 100.64 million in the previous session. On Thursday the market got off to a strong start, but then retreated to finish with its first loss in more than a week. Analysts said the downturn appeared to signal increasing concern that the economy was losing momentum.

The U.S. government's report that the gross national product grew at an unexpectedly low 1.3 percent inflation-adjusted annual rate in the first quarter sent interest rates tumbling, and thus drew a brief favorable response from stock traders. GNP measures the total value of goods and services, including income from foreign investments.

Traders' enthusiasm soon gave way, however, to worries that the pace of growth in business activity and corporate profits would remain subpar in the months ahead.

Brokers also noted that investors were proceeding cautiously Friday with some options and futures on stock indexes reaching their expiration date.

In recent months, complex maneuvers by professional traders involving the options and futures and the big-name blue chip stocks have touched off sharp swings in the stocks' prices as the options and futures approached expiration.

In earlier trading, Texas Instruments dropped 4% to 92% after taking a 12½-point tumble Thursday, when the company reported first-quarter earnings of 37 cents a share, down from $3.32 in the comparable period a year

CBS rose 21/4 to 1081/2, steadying after a 31/2 point decline Thursday, as traders continued to assess the complex offer made by Ted Turner, chief executive of Turner Broadcasting, for control of the company through an exchange of stock and debt securities.

Xerox Said to Discuss Sale of Publishing Unit

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — Xerox Corp., the U.S. office-automation and insurance company, is negotiating to sell its R. R. Bowker Co. publishing subsidiary, according to sources close to the International Thomson Organization Ltd., a Toronto-based multinational conglomerate with interests in publishing, travel and oil, is considered to be the most likely purchaser.

R. R. Bowker Co. is best-known for publishing major reference books and magazines, in-cluding Books In Print, the listing of all available book titles, and Publishers Weekly, the trade journal of the book publishing industry. Among its other reference books and magazines are Library Journal, Literary Market Place and American Men & Women of Science.

Panamanian Leader Urges Use of Economic Measures

By LEONARD SILK New York Times Service

ANAMA CITY - President Nicolas Ardito Barletta of Panama is an economist who took his bachelor's and master's degrees in agricultural economics at North Carolina State University and his doctorate in economics at the University of Chicago.

He has spent most of the last two decades in various economic posts. At the time he was elected president last year, with the backing of the National Guard, he was at the World Bank as vice president for Lann America and the Caribbean.

Despite his close ties with the military, Mr. Barletta favors peaceful economic development, rather than military force, as the way to prevent the spread of communism and further the trend toward democracy in

In an interview, Mr. Barletta expressed anxiety over the strains that Latin nations, including his, were undergoing as they struggle to cope with external debt, inflation and

'Adjustment policies have a limit beyond which it is very hard to go,' he said.

unemployment. "Adjustment policies have a limit beyond which it is very hard to go," he said. "It is very important for the maintenance of political and social stability in Latin American countries that they go from an adjustment via recession to an adjustment via recovery and growth."

To achieve such a dynamic change, he says three things are necessary: internal policies to increase and diversify exports and to make economies more efficient; additional external finance "to soften the blow," and, "most important, the international recovery, along with a degree of openness in the United States, Japan and Europe for Latin American exports."

Mr. Barletta said that at the moment, there is a "wave" of democratic governments in the region, but it would be "a great irony if we lose the opportunity to strengthen them." That, he warned, could happen as a result of rising unemployment, urban misery and poverty, and a shortage of jobs and services for young

Mr. Barletta is a strong supporter of the efforts of the Contadora group — Colombia, Mexico, Venezuela and Panama — to achieve an agreement for multilateral negotiations to settle local disputes, such as those in Nicaragua and El Salvador.

Mr. Barletta said he felt that greater efforts would be needed by the United States and other Western countries to establish order in the international monetary system if Latin America's troubles were to be solved.

Specifically, he said a "soft landing" for the dollar - a gradual downward readjustment in its exchange value - could help to reduce interest rates and spur economic growth.

Like President Barletta, many bankers and businessmen interviewed in Panama said they believe the answer to any communist threat in the region is not force, but basically economic development and measures to improve social stability.

Panama which uses the United States dollar as its own national currency, and has no central bank, has virtually no inflation - the last year's rate was between 2 and 3 percent. But Panama suffers from a huge external debt, economic stagnation and high unemployment.

Mr. Barletta is trying to find a way out of this country's economic bind, but many in the banking and business community believe he cannot do so unless he shows greater political independence and skill in overcoming the dictates of the military.

Chrysler Agrees On Seoul Tie

Samsung Project To Make Parts

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches SEOUL -- Chrysler Corp. and amsung Co. of South Korea have agreed to form a joint company to manufacture and procure automo-tive parts in South Korea for Chrysler, Let A. Iacocca, the chairman of the U.S. automaker, said Mr. Iacocca said the venture initially would be limited to parts manufacturing, but may be ex-panded in the future to include manufacture of cars for Chrysler. "We hope the joint-venture company could develop into a higger thing," he said. "We would like an assembly line of cars at some time in the future." The new undertaking is subject to government approval. It follows a study started by the two companies in June, 1984.

The Chrysler chief, who arrived is Sent Thursday to discuss the in Seoul on Thursday to discuss the venture, said Chrysler and Samsung each will own 50 percent of the new concern, tentatively named Samsung Development Co. Mr. Iacocca did not disclose its capitalization but called it "substantial." He added that the new company will work with other South Korean concerns to procure automotive components for Chrysler vehicles assembled in North America. "We will start modestly." Mr.

Incocca said. An office staffed by personnel from the two companies will be opened immediately. Samsung operates a wide range of industrial plants and services, including high-technology electronics, shipyards and machinery. "This is a significant step for Chrysler," Mr. Iacocca said. "It will make Korea a major parts and components base for Chrysler, and keep us competitive in the world automotive marketplace. Staying competitive worldwide is the only way to protect the jobs of our workers in the United States,"

"No one is more concerned that I am about the trade imbalance and its impact on American jobs," Mr. lacocca said. "But as a businessman, I must be pragmatic."

Mr. Iacocca came to South Korea after a visit to Japan, where it was announced that Mitsubishi bishi cars in the United States. "Under America's current trade policies, there seem to be two alternatives involving automobiles," Mr. lacocca said.

"The first is simply to import more foreign cars and trucks which are completely assembled outside the United States. In that case, all of the labor and most of the profits go to the foreign producer. This heightens the trade tension because no American jobs are created, and

But Mr. lacocca maintained that in the arrangements that Chrysler has made in Japan and South Korea "there is a sharing in the economic and employment benefits of our trade, Both American and Korean jobs will be created, for example, because of our new partnership of his offer at $175 a share, al-here," he said of the Seoul link. though analysts said it was more

British Banks Cut Base Rates By Half-Point

LONDON — Four British banks said Friday that they were cutting their base lending rates to 121/2 percent, effective immediately. The reductions later were endorsed by the Bank of England. National Westminster Bank PLC, Citibank NA, Lloyds Bank PLC and Williams & Glyn's Bank PLC had been quoting a 13-percent rate. The base rate is the rate on which banks determine interest charged to borrowers and paid to depositors.

National Westminster, Lloyds and William & Glyn's also cut the interest they pay on seven-day deposits to 9%.

It was the second round of cuts in a month. Base rates were increased three times in January to defend the British pound. "We remain hopeful that the strengthened sterling exchange rates will enable this downward trend to continue," said P.W. Wilkinson, National Westmin-ster's chief executive.

Getting Merrill Lynch Going Again Its Latest Leader Has Ideas — But Will They Work?

By Leslie Wayne New York time, Service NEW YORK — There is no other firm in the world quite like Merrill Lynch & Co.

It is the giant of the brokerage industry, from New York to London to Tokyo. In the United States. Merrill's brokerage offices have been known for decades in nearly every hamlet in all Americans live within 20 miles (32 kilometers) of a Merrill

More recently, the firm has elbowed its way into the upper echelons of investment banking, becoming a major force in the world of high-stakes corporate

But the giant is faltering. Its 1984 financial results were dis-mal. Merrill earned $95 million, compared with $230 million the year before — on revenues in the same $6-billion range. Its pretax profit margin was a slim 1,2 percent, and its 4.8-percent return on equity was far below the in-

And Mernll's executive office has been in disarray: Three different chief executives have reigned in the last four years.

Those inside and outside the company contend Merrill has grown too far and too fast, and that costs have ballooned dan-gerously out of control. And more fundamentally, they question whether the new man at the top has the vision and the inner fortitude needed to make the hard decisions to get the giant moving again. The new man, nearly 10 months in the job, is William A. Schreyer, 57, a gregarious and ebullient former branch manager who claims to have the situation in hand, particularly the company's rising costs, Mr. Schreyer points to a cut of 2,300 people from Merrill's payroll of 42,500. He has reorganized the company into smaller units, which can be more tightly monitored.

Critics are not impressed. "They haven't really contained costs," said Joel Rosenthal, an analyst for the firm Jesup & Lamont. "They have cut out some, but others are moving up."

But Mr. Schreyer is undaunted by such remarks. He is convinced the dark days of 1984 were a fluke of history that is over, and insists that his efforts will raise 1985 profits and position Merrill for the day when it, and a few other giants, will rule global financial services.

"I couldn't be more positive or enthused," said Mr. Schreyer, who returned to Merrill last January after a two-month leave for coronary bypass surgery, "We're going to let the results speak for themselves, and I will get great satisfaction out of showing

Yet a larger question looms at Merrill, With some $2 billion in capital, the company towers over all brokerage rivals and has the sheer financial might to be a dominant player in the decades ahead. The issue for Merrill, however, is one of excellence. Will the company remain in the big leagues simply because of its size — a huge, but mediocre player? Or will it realize its potential and lead the industry in creativity and profits?

The challenge is enormous, for Merrill aspires to succeed where others have not dared to go before: It wants to be the top in both retail brokerage and invest-ment banking. Many wonder whether Merrill, or any company for that matter, can pull off that feat. Merrill's core business, retail brokerage, is being buffeted by cutthroat competition, and its prize asset, a finely-tuned network of 10,000 retail brokers, is seen as a costly anachronism in an electronic era.

"There is no question that Merrill is a major player," said (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

IMF Makes Plea For Stability in Exchange Rates

WASHINGTON - The International Monetary Fund's policymaking interim committee called Friday for countries to seek greater exchange-rate stability.

The plea came in a communique issued at the end of IMF and World Bank semiannual talks.

The panel also said the trend toward protectionism in trade must be quickly reversed. This followed a call earlier in the conference by a World Bank committee for a new round of international trade talks. Fiscal deficits in several nations, the committee said, continue to cause concern. But the communique praised the U.S. government's initiative to cut its budget deficit. A more critical view of U.S. economic action, however, was voiced by Nigel Lawson, British chancel-lor of the exchequer. He said as the talks between the two international agencies ended that the Reagan administration should seek a bigger cut in the deficit, which was, he charged, being financed by "sucking in the savings of the rest of the

The U.S. administration's bid for nearly $300 billion in spending cuts over the next three years should probably be matched by increased taxes, the chancellor said.

Mr. Lawson said the U.S. deficit. estimated at a record $213 billion this year, will probably be a problem for a several years and will keep interest rates high, despite White House plans to trim it to about $100 billion in 1988. Mr. Lawson appeared receptive to U.S. suggestions that European nations should improve their economies by removing "structural rigidities," such as excessive regulauon. Malcolm Baldrige, the U.S. secretary of commerce, recently described Europe as a backwater of controls that stifle entrepreneurship and resistance to service in-

Linking the trade and exchangerate preoccupations of the talks between the two agencies, the French finance minister, Pierre Beregovoy said trade negotiations cannot ig-nore the extreme instability of international exchange rates and high interest rates. Earlier during the talks, the World Bank urged industrial and developing countries alike to join a new round of talks to lower barriers

The Reagan administration would like to see such a round take place in 1986, and is pushing for creation of a preparatory committee this summer to start planning it.

The U.S. president is expected to urge such a timetable at the economic summit of industrial nations ia Bonn May 2-4.

The bank also announced that its executive board has decided to go ahead with discussions with member countries aimed at creating a new international agency to insure private investment in developing countries against political risk in an effort to increase capital flows to

It also urged increased aid to sub-Sahara Africa and multiyear rescheduling of debts of countries there to allow them to focus more of their energies on reducing their acute poverty and achieving economic growth in the years ahead.

In another development, the United States again opposed ex-pansion of the World Bank's resources. Many countries expressed disappointment at what has so far been a successful Reagan administration effort to block a capital increase for the bank.

Dollar Stabilizes in N.Y. Trading

NEW YORK - The dollar advanced Friday in New York and dealers said it appeared to stabilize as the market looked for direction on the economy and interest rates. But the dollar remained below 3 Deutsche marks and dealers said it

TORONTO - A consortium led by Mobil Corp. of the United States is expected to go ahead with a project to develop the controver-sial Hibernia oilfield off the coast of Newfoundland, industry and government officials say.

The multibillion-dollar project was delayed for years because of a dispute between Newfoundland's provincial government and the federal government in Ottawa over the going on between the consortium, ownership of mineral rights. But in March, the Supreme Court of Canada upheld federal domain over the oilfield, rejecting

German Banker Calls Forecasts Too Optimistic

Remers
FRANKFURT — West German economic

FRANKFURT — West German economic growth may already have peaked and forecasts of 3-percent expansion of the gross national product in 1985 are wishful thinking, Hans Fahning, chairman of the Association of Public Sector Banks, said Friday.

The Bundesbank, West Germany's central bank, said in its 1984 annual report released Thursday that the foundation for economic growth in Germany was secure.

GNP forecasts generally range from 2.5 to 3 percent from government ministers, and some economic institutes have been citing 3 percent or more. GNP measures the total value of a nation's goods and services, including income from foreign investments.

Mr. Fahning told a news conference that several components of domestic demand are weak and growth is heavily dependent on ex-ports that could easily be hit by a dollar fall.

Mr. Fahning, who is chief executive of the Hamburgische Landesbank Girczentrale, said he believed that the Bundesbank had set an

Output and Sales Rise at Jaguar

United Press International LONDON - Jaguar PLC, the private automaker broken off from BL PLC last year, has reported a 13-percent increase in sales and a 15-percent rise in production for the first quarter òf 1985.

Jaguar sold Thursday that it sold 8,883 cars in the quarter and produced 10,606. The automaker said it plans to spend £400 million ($516 million) by the end of the decade to increase production to 60,000.

Also Thursday, a £2-million headquarters for Jaguar Holland was initiated. The United States is Jaguar's biggest market, but the company is trying to increase sales in Europe.

To Reorganize New York Times Service NEW YORK -- Manufacturers Hanover Corp. has announced a reorganization plan that it said was designed to bolster lagging earnings and to shift the emphasis from growth in size and gross earnings.

Under the plan announced Thursday, the highly central-ized bank holding company will be broken into five units, each a separate profit center headed by its own executive vice president. Part of the new strategy is to break down the distinctions between the bank and the holding company.

Manufacturers Hanover has generally been viewed by analysts as a big bank with some-what lackluster earnings. But banking analysis responded favorably to the reorganizaton plans.

GOLDKORN TALES

Reviewed by Michiko Kakutani

LEIB GOLDKORN is back! You will remember him, perhaps, from Leslie Epstein's wonderful story, "The Steinway Quintet," published nearly a decade ago. L. Goldkorn, a person of some culture and sensitivity. A 20th-century man, survivor of the Holocaust, contemporary of S. Freud and L. Wittgenstein; a lover of music, himself a flutist of some distinction, and a player of the Bechstein piano at the Steinway Restaurant. A non-believer, a drinker of schnapps. You would like to ask, maybe, what is the meaning of his tale? What moral Epstein means for the reader to draw from his very funny, very upsetting adventures? Is his history not the history of this century? Of modern times? Notice how like Saul Bellow's hero, A. Sammler, Goldkorn is haunted by memories of the terrible events in Europe during the war. How he, too, has seen, in the city of New York, violent sinkhole of hooligans, wise-guys, and rude defamers of all that is beautiful and civilized. Are we not meant by Epstein, author of "King of the Jews" and "Regina," to find some kind of parable

As his earlier fiction has demonstrated, Epstein is an exuberant writer, whose ambitions to address the large matters of history, and our moral and intellectual choices, is matched by a commodious talent an ease in story-telling and a screwball feeling for comedy that counterpoints the high seriousness of his subjects and invests them, at once, with humanity and a sense of emergency.

In attempting to write two sequels to his masterful "Steinway Quintet" — which is also included in this volume — the author has, of course, set himself a daunting task. That original story - in which two thugs hold the patrons and staff of the Steinway Restaurant hostage, and effect a miraculous, if somewhat ambiguous, escape — not only introduced Leib Goldkorn, a truly enchanting character, but also seemed, in its juxtaposition of Old World culture and contemporary violence, an organic and work of art. So perfectly bonded was its alloy of the magical and the real, the colloquial and the marvelous, that the reader felt there were no loose ends left to be tied, no further points to be made.

Do Leib Goldkorn's further adventures live up to his debut? Well, no and yes. The second story in this volume, "Music of the Spheres," is an anemic attempt to show how the passing of time has affected both Goldkorn and the Steinway Restaurant, how feelings like love and hope can be reborn long after they appeared to have died. Both the restaurant and our hero, it seems, have fallen on hard times -Goldkorn has been reduced to playing musical glasses on the street corner for a living, the Steinway has become a sort of Off Off Broadway theater and both undergo, in the course of the story, certain transformations.

No doubt in casting Goldkorn as Roderigo in a Steinway production of "Othello," Epstein wants to draw some parallels between art and reality, but his efforts produce only a tired echo of his novel "Regiin which the heroine mixes up the role she plays in life and the role she plays in Chekhov's "Seaguil." In "The Magic Flute," however, Goldkorn — and his creator — come full circle. This story not only works magical changes on the themes of Mozart's opera, but on Epstein's previous two stories as well, and the result is an energetic, densely patterned tale about revenge and forgiveness and the stunning tricks that life can play on its victims.

After many years, Goldkorn again finds himself working at the Steinway Restaurant, though in the reduced capacity of shoe-shine boy, he finds the Rudall & Rose flute that had been stolen from him back in 1963; and he also encounters again — or so he thinks — the man responsible for sending his family off to the death camps many years ago.

Epstein has orchestrated this story — and in retrospect, the reader sees, all three "Goldkorn Tales" - as a musical composition, reworking motifs, images, and emotional notes in a series of variations that cause the reader to constantly reas-sess what has gone before. And by its end, as Leib Goldkorn reembraces music as a symbol of nature and harmony, the reader, too, is moved to celebrate the redemptive powers of the imagination — and to applaud Epstein's artistry and ambition.

Hilton May Sell Hotel

New York Times Service
NEW YORK — Hilton Hotels Corp., whose application to operate a casino in its unopened.

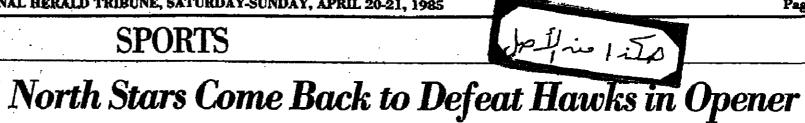

Atlantic City hotel was rejected seven weeks ago, has said that it was discussing the sale of the property to Donald Trump, a New York real estate-

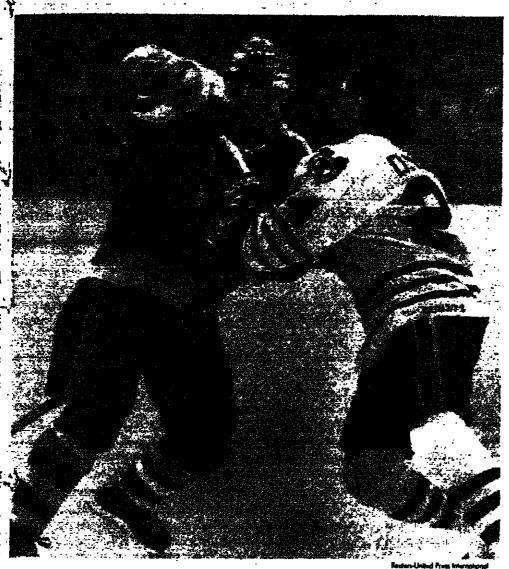

A source close to the negotiations said that the price being discussed for the New Jersey property, the Atlantic City Hilton, was between $320 million and $325 million. This source said the deal would be completed by early next week. The 634-room structure cost Hilton $308 million to build.

U.S. Upsets Sweden in World Hockey; Soviet, Czechoslovakia Win 2d Games

PRAGUE - Corey Millen scared the winner early in the final period Thursday as the U.S. team upset Sweden, 4-3, in the World Ice Hockey championships. "Our NHL players showed poise

'Spiritual Godmother' of Wilderness

By Barbara Gamarekian New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — When Margaret E.
Murie packed her trousseau 60 years ago for her wedding on the Yukon River, it consisted of a fur parka, fur boots, flannel pajamas, knickers, wool shirts and hiking

It was the beginning, she says, of a great adventure. For more than 30 years she shared her husband's life as a wildlife biologist, first on the trail in Alaska and then in the wilderness of Wyoming.

Mardy, as she is known, met Olaus J.

Murie when she was a girl in Fairbanks, Alaska. As his collaborator and companion she raised three children in the wilderness, at times with little more than a backpack, a campfire and a tent. "We cooked over the coals of the fire and washed clothes in the creek and stood the children in the creek and scrubbed them up," she recalled. With a chuckle, she added: "But think of the things I didn't have to do. I didn't have to talk on the telephone or go to a bridge party or wax

Murie, who was in Washington recently for the 50th anniversary celebration of the Wilderness Society, has been a member of the society's governing council since 1976. Her husband, who died in 1963, was its president

Murie, 82, lives in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, in a log house in the middle of Grand Teton National Park. She skis cross-country every day, cooks on a wood stove and feeds martens at her kitchen door. She is still on the lecture circuit, and she speaks vigorously about the continuing necessity to protect the wilderness. "If man is to survive happily, he must have some wilderness. Wilderness has some right to exist. and right now we have only 2 percent of our land protected." The Wilderness Society's president, William A. Turnage, said: "In many ways Mardy is kind of the spiritual godmother of the environmental movement. People admire and revere her as kind of a guru, and the only other woman who can match Mardy's stature in the history of the American conservation movement is Rachel Carson."

The first woman to graduate from the University of Alaska, in 1924 ("I was it — I was the senior class - and we had a big commencement with a band, and the governor came"), she has lectured, written and lobbied on behalf of wilderness preservation. She was in the White House Rose Garden when President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the 1964 Wilderness Act, and conservationists say she was instrumental in the passage of the 1980 Alaska Lands Act, which set aside millions of wilderness acres.

She has written three books: "Wapiti Wilderness," with her husband; "Two in the Far North" and "Island Between." "Two in the Conservationist Murie: Encouraged by young people.

Far North" was reissued in 1978 by Alaska Northwest Publishing Co., and went into a fourth printing in 1983.

Olaus Murie's work with the U.S. Biological Survey studying caribou in Alaska took him into the wilderness for months. His wife frequently traveled with him. "Olaus had supreme confidence that I could do anything." She traveled by dog team and snowshoe trying she said, to keep up with a man who "people used to say must be half cari-bou." She told tales of the Yukon and Lobo Lake and the mining camps where she would wear her one "dressy" flannel shirt to dances and "dance all night, because I was only one of five women with 70 men." She told of taking her 10-month-old son, Martin, on a four-month expedition up the Old Crow River. "I wonder about it now," she said. "We had some adventures, but the baby never suffered at all. He learned how to crawl on the gravel bars, but the gravel hurt his knees, so he crawled around like a little bear, on his hands and feet."

In the 1930s her husband was sent by the Biological Survey, a forerunner of the Fish and Wildlife Service, to Jackson Hole to study elk. The Murie family lived in Jackson during the winter, when the elk would migrate to a national on the edge of town. Each spring the family followed the herd to the hills, living in tents and cooking over campfires, while she worked with her husband, cataloging his botanical and small mammal

Students from the Teton Science School, an environmental education institution, frequently drop by her Jackson Hole home for tea, cookies and conversation. "The one thing that really encourages me," she said, "are the young people — they have such a real interest in preserving the environment."
